A former U.S. Navy Petty Officer, Little Caesars franchisee Patricia Evans is proud to be part of a growing franchise system that is dedicated to helping U.S. military veterans. “It’s great to be part of a company that recognizes veterans and supports them with business opportunities,” said Patricia. “The Little Caesars Veterans Program has helped me begin the next chapter in my professional career. As an industry leader, Little Caesars has a strong, nationally-recognized brand, and offers the training and tools needed to grow this business.”

The result of Little Caesars’ desire to thank the men and women who have served in the U.S. Military for their service, the Little Caesars Veterans program provides military veterans with a business ownership opportunity: becoming a Little Caesars franchisee. The program offers honorably discharged service-disabled veterans who qualify as Little Caesars franchisees a benefit of up to $68,000. Honorably discharged non-service-disabled veterans who qualify as Little Caesars franchisees, such as Patricia, are eligible for a benefit of $10,000.

Patricia served in the U.S. Navy for five years, two of which were spent in Adak, Alaska, the westernmost U.S. city, located on one of the Aleutian Islands. Before becoming a Little Caesars franchisee, she owned and operated a chicken farm in Florida, raising chickens with her two sons, Vince, 21 and Andrew, 20. Little Caesars was a natural fit for Patricia because she wanted to invest with an established brand that has a record of significant sales increases that exceeded industry growth.

“Little Caesars is growing, and I’m looking forward to bringing the brand and the great product line-up to Valdosta,” added Patricia. “I’m excited about growing with a proven franchise system and opening additional locations in the community.”

Planning to become a multi-unit Little Caesars franchisee in the future, Patricia chose Little Caesars in part because it’s a business her two sons, Vince and Andrew, can be involved in, with increasing responsibility as the business grows. “When I was deciding on the next phase of my career, I knew I wanted something that my sons could take an active role in. I wanted a business that I could build and that would provide a good business opportunity for them. Little Caesars was my choice," said Patricia.

Evans plans to become an active member of the Valdosta community. "As a business owner in the community my family and I plan to support local organizations and schools, and help out when I can," said Patricia. "I'm really looking forward to providing the Valdosta community with high quality products with great convenience and value."
